

Financial Times Recognizes Camden Capital as Top 300 Registered Investment Advisor

Los Angeles, June 2019 – Camden Capital has been distinguished by the Financial Times as one of the Top 300 Registered Investment Advisors (FT 300) of 2019. Qualified registered investment advisors (RIAs) must have a minimum of $300 million in assets and no more than 75% of the practice’s assets are institutional. Selection is independent and objective, and there are no fees or other considerations required of RIAs that apply for the FT 300.

This recognition places Camden Capital among the elite RIA firms across the United States, with the average FT 300 practice managing $4.6 billion in assets. Camden Capital’s total Regulatory Assets Under Management at the time of application, as of year-end 2018, was approximately $3.17 billion. As of May 31, 2019, the firm had over $4.5 billion in assets under management.

The Financial Times is one of the world’s leading financial news organizations, recognized internationally for its authority, integrity and accuracy. This is the sixth annual FT 300 list, produced independently by the Financial Times in collaboration with Ignites Research, a subsidiary of the FT that provides business intelligence on the asset management industry.

“We are extremely proud of our team and excited to continue to strive for excellence for years to come,” stated Camden Capital’s Founder and CEO, John Krambeer. “The Financial Times is a well-respected publication and we are always grateful to be recognized by them.”

“Camden Capital has been building upon its core foundation and expanding its boutique investment and service offering throughout the country, recently opening its latest office in Century City, Los Angeles,” added Camden Capital’s President and Partner, Rich Bursek. “Our independent structure, objective investment platform and underlying fiduciary duty differentiate us from a majority of the traditional firms, and these attributes have been significant contributors to our success.”
